Hume Studies is supported by grants from the Faculty of Arts, The University of Western Ontario, and from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada.

This special edition marks the tenth anniversary of Hume Studies. John Davis saw the need for a publication in which current research on Hume could be made available for study and discussion. Under Professor Davis' editorship, Hume Studies has become an indispensable companion for Hume scholars throughout the world. All indicators suggest that Hume Studies ranks among the very best journals available to scholars, and that it will continue to play a vital role for scholars in the years to come.

In addition to their high quality, the papers selected for this number give some indication of the wide range of interests which are pursued by those studying the writings of David Hume.

My personal thanks are extended to Professor Davis for inviting me to serve as editor for this special issue of Hume Studies.
